

Scenario:

Charlie Mcguire who is the hiring manager for Wells Fargo, has just finished another day of searching for candidates that meet the requirements for the job openings he needs to fill. Not only is it hard to find decent enough people to work these jobs but it is even harder to find someone who meets the minimum qualifications. He begins to research for a website where he can filter out applicants who are not qualified and also find some bright minds. He stumbles upon our website and is immediately sold on the matching features. No longer will he have to sift through applications to find someone who might workout. Charlie creates a job posting and is thrilled with the immediate flood of qualified candidates. He even stays a little overtime the next day reaching out to candidates and scheduling interviews. Wells Fargo never again had many empty positions.

User Stories:

- As a student who has trouble staying focused I want something that keeps me accountable and excited about the future.
- As a faculty member for a university I want something that I can recommend to students that will ensure a successful future.
- As an employer I struggle to find good quality candidates for positions with certain minimum qualifications.